Abstract

A document indexing system utilizes two indexes. An infrequent word index is maintained separately from a frequent word index to map the locations of words that occur infrequently in the indexed documents. The infrequent word index may be stored and partitioned differently than the frequent word index to promote efficiency.